THE CHRONICLE.

SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1878.

A Manitoba Winter.

They have genuine cold weather in Manitoba, where the thermometer marks thirty degrees below zero for days together, and frequently drops to fifty. A correspondent says that what is called a pondre day is exceedingly dangerous for the traveler—not because the temperature is then lowest, but because the air is filled with fine snow, so that night is entirely obscured at a distance of a few feet. A wind sifts the snow over the paths, obliterating all the guiding marks, and the chilled traveler is lost. The most unconquerable desire to rest is not the least important part of the danger. The coldest days are still "so magically still that all the usual sounds of nature seem to be suspended; when the ice cracks miles away with a report like a cannon; when the breaking of a twig reaches one like the falling of a tree; when one's own footsteps, clad in soft moccasins, come back from the yielding snow like the crunching of an iron heel through gravel; when every artificial sound is exaggerated a hundred fold, and nature seems to start at every break in the intense silence. The atmosphere is as clear as crystal, and the range of vision seems to be unlimited." On such days a nose freezes with wonderful quickness, and it is reckless to expose that organ for many minutes.

The facade of the United States section at the Paris exhibition promises to be exceedingly effective. The canvas screens, which it has been found necessary to stretch across the roof, are now in position, and will bear favorable comparison with anything of the kind in the exhibition. Each screen bears the name and device of the states of the Union, and in the center is a grand design representing the arms of the United States. The colors are very bright and the ornamental designs very chaste and effective. The designs on the screens are so arranged as to form lines running the whole length of the building, so as to draw out the perspective lines and make the United States section appear as long as possible.

Iron is the currency of the iron region of East Tennessee, the metal being worked up into bars, half a dozen of which can easily be carried upon the shoulder. When a man wants shoes, clothing, coffee, sugar, or any of all domestic articles, he shoulders the bars of iron which have been given him in exchange for his labor, goes to a merchant and gets them.

A three-year-old boy in North Bennington asked an honest but poor Irishman the other day for a penny to buy some candy, and when he replied that "Faith, he hadn't a cent," the little fellow inquired with all the innocence imaginable, "Have you failed?"

In the province of Nassau, Prussia, the common nettle has been treated like hemp, and found to yield a fiber as fine as silk, and quite as durable as hemp. A new industry is the result.

Strong doses of advertising should be administered to business that looks billious about this time of the year.

Another waiter has fallen heir to a heavy property. It pays to wait.
